Leading the way in United States meat production increases in 2017 (by percent) are projected to come from beef (+4.0%), pork (+3.8%), and turkey (+1.9%), followed by broilers (+1.9%). (Source: USDA WASDE) Production estimates in all four livestock sectors were lowered from the May estimates for 2017. Lower cattle and hog weights were a factor.

United States crop projections for (2017/2018) have projected corn acreage at 90 million acres, down from 94 million acres the previous year, but unchanged from the May estimates. Lower corn acres along with lower yield projections have reduced corn production by almost 1.1 billion bushels from the previous year. While U.S. corn production is projected to be significantly lower; reduced corn exports and usage may only reduce ending supplies by less than ten per cent. U.S. Soybean production is projected at 89.5 million acres, up from 83.4 million acres the previous year. Production is however estimated to slightly decline from the previous year based on lower soybean yields. With higher projected soybean imports; U.S. ending soybean stocks are actually projected to increase 10 per cent from the previous year.
