Come help us find ferruginous hawks this spring

The Saskatchewan Ministry of Environment, with funding from Environment and Climate Change Canada, is conducting a province-wide inventory of ferruginous hawks in 2018. Results from the inventory will be used to guide stewardship and to monitor population trends of this endangered species in the province.

If you are a keen observer, want to learn something new and are available during the last week or weekend of April/beginning of May, we need your help. No birding experience is required.

The task:

- to conduct surveys from the road in pre-assigned blocks of the province
- to look for stick nests within assigned blocks and identify species

We will provide:

- virtual training
- staff support
- gas and meals
- informational material

You will need:

- a vehicle
- a scope, binoculars and a phone with GPS (these items may be available upon request)
